The whanau (extended family) believed in their atua and tupuna stories as directions for behaviour. These are relevant today but they need unravelling because the stories of the children, women and whanau are found behind and around the heroic stories of males; who apparently single-handedly produced the cosmos.

TRADITIONAL MAORI PARENTING - Mana Ririki

Maori legends, stories and myths are passed down through the generations by the tradition of oral history - the telling of ancient stories, myths and legends. This tradition continues today and is practised in schools, on many marae and by many parents. On many marae, elders teach tribal lore, etiquette and genealogy. They also retell the Maori legends that form the basis of Maori beliefs.
